

Jasmine Noghrey, OTR

Clinical Supervisor/ Occupational Therapist

Jasmine is an occupational therapist specializing in neurological rehabilitation and pediatric care, including early intervention. With a robust background in behavioral therapy, she has worked with children and adults across various disabilities for many years. She is also a special education instructor and has experience as a preschool teacher, educating students from early childhood to adults. Jasmine facilitates social skills groups in collaboration with a speech-language pathologist (SLP) for both children and adults, enhancing their interpersonal interactions. Additionally, she has served as a dating coach for studies at UCLA's neurological department and is the founder of Joojeh Joy, a sensory toy company.

mygestones

